To whom it may concern,

The mission of the Water and Environmental Resource Licensing Section includes protecting the water, aquatic, wetlands, and tree resources of Broward County through regulation of dredging, wetlands, and docks/seawall projects, among other duties. All over-water structures may impact benthic resources, such as seagrasses, by shading or construction. Florida's seagrasses offer several ecosystem services including maintaining water clarity, stabilizing bottom sediment and retarding erosion, providing habitat and food for various species, and serving as a nursery for Florida's recreationally and commercially significant marine life.

This letter serves as a courtesy reminder that all in-water or over-water structures including, but not limited to floating docks, boatlift and jet-ski lifts are regulated by Broward County's Environmental Engineering and Permitting Division; therefore, they require a Broward County Environmental Resource License or General License. Unlicensed structures are subject to enforcement action that may result in monetary penalty.

Chapter 27, Pollution Control, of the Code of Ordinances of Broward County, Florida states, "Sec. 27-332. Dock means a facility, such as, but not limited to, piers, walkways or other structures, that are constructed within a waterward area and is for the purpose of mooring a vessel."

If natural resources (wetlands, seagrasses or mangroves) are present, among other criteria, an Environmental Resource License application must be submitted. Licenses shall not be contrary to public interest and may require specific design criteria and/or mitigation.

Projects meeting criteria for a General License will not substantially impede water flow, impact natural resources or submerged aquatic vegetation, or violate applicable local and state water quality standards. If no natural resources (seagrasses or mangroves) are present and an existing dock is 1) not enlarged beyond 500 ft², 2) is a new proposed dock of less than 500 ft², or 3) an exact replacement of an existing dock, among other criteria, a General License application may be applicable.

The fee schedule and Environmental Resource and General License applications are attached. Applications may be submitted through Broward County's online e-Permitting system. Additional information and criteria beyond over-water structures that require an Environmental Resource License, can be found on Broward County's website or within the Chapter 27 of the Code of Ordinances of Broward County.

Sincerely,

Linda Sunderland
